

SOUTH BOSTON LIQUOR MART

Lots of people rob from liquor stores. But it takes a special kind of criminal to actually steal a whole liquor store. In 1984, Whitey's associate Steve Flemmi threatened the then owner, saying "You wouldn't want your daughter to grow up without a father, would you?" Aside from all the actual killing of people, this has to be one of the worst things Whitey did. Who destroys a family-owned business like that? (I mean other than Wal-Mart. WHO?) Then in 1991, Whitey won the Massachusetts Lottery. Actually he didn't win. Someone else did. And Whitey told that someone to become his partner, or else. That winning ticket was purchased here.

TRIPLE O'S LOUNGE

Once called Transit Cafe, this Southie bar was where Whitey's protege Kevin Weeks worked as a bouncer and where Whitey hung out. It is now a sushi restaurant (of course). Cue comments from old timers about how everything's gone good is now a freaking sushi restaurant.

SOUTH BOSTON HIGH SCHOOL

Whitey's girlfriend Catherine Greig attended, and was voted best looking in her graduating class. And don't forget Shelley Murphy, the Globe reporter who has covered Whitey for years. She went here too. (As for Whitey, he never graduated high school.)

799 EAST 3RD STREET

This South Boston house was owned by the brother of a Whitey associate and is nicknamed "the Haunt". Three of Whitey's victims were buried in the basement of this house. In 1985 the house went on the market and Whitey was forced to have the bodies dug up and moved on Halloween weekend. This is a good lesson. Unless you know that the house in which you're burying bodies is going to be in the family forever, probably pick a location that can't be sold to a bunch of Yuppies.

Also, and this should go without saying, NEVER go in a house that has a nickname that incorporates the word "haunt" - that's just common sense.

CASTLE ISLAND

Whitey used to take long walks at South Boston's Castle Island with partners in crime Stephen "The Rifleman" Flemmi and Kevin Weeks. So yeah, in addition to holding open car doors and feeding stray cats, Whitey also loved walks on the beach.

OLD HARBOR HOUSING PROJECT

This South Boston housing project (renamed McCormack in 1981) was home to a young Whitey Bulger. It was here that the Whitey mystique was born and here where some still remember him as a modern Robin Hood. It's amazing how much mileage men can get out of opening a couple of car doors, isn't it?

ROTARY VARIETY STORE

This South Boston variety store was where bookies, loan sharks and drug dealers stopped to drop off "rent payments" to Bulger's organization.

MARSHALL MOTORS

In the 1970s, Whitey joined the Somerville-based Winter Hill Gang and spent time at this gang hangout. This was the spot where Whitey met Stephen Flemmi and they began a lifetime of just terrible, terrible things. (Oh and then this place became a CHURCH. For real. A CHURCH.)

83 BEALS STREET

This Brookline house is the birthplace of President John F. Kennedy. In 1975, Whitey frebombed the house to protest then Senator Teddy Kennedy's support for busing, according to his cohorts. He also spray painted the words "Bus Teddy" on the sidewalk.

BOSTON GLOBE HEADQUARTERS

In the fall of 1974, Whitey had had enough of the Globe. The newspaper's editorial board supported busing and the paper was "hostile" to Southie. So he did what anyone does when they read a bunch of things they don't like. He loaded up a gun, got in his car, and opened fire at the building. How do you like them apples?

TENEAN BEACH

Let's put it this way -- this Dorchester beach's reputation wasn't exactly made a whole lot worse when law enforcement dug up the remains of a Whitey victim there in 2000. A Yelp review says it all: "Not sure if I'd ever swim here. No, I definitely wouldn't."

WOLLASTON BEACH

Wollaston Beach was where Whitey and FBI agent John Connolly met in 1975 to firm up plans for Whitey to become an FBI informant.

DUNKIN' DONUTS

It can't be a true Boston story if there isn't a Dunkin' Donuts angle. Whitey once made a Dunkin' Donuts stop with a murder victim slumped over in the passenger seat. Which raises the important question -- you know those people who seem to just kind of sit in Dunkin' Donuts all day? Is it possible they're all just dead?

PLYMOUTH ROCK

In 1976, still upset about busing, Whitey allegedly "gave dynamite to a South Boston man and instructed him to place it on historic Plymouth Rock." Seriously. Luckily, the rock survived mostly unscathed. It makes sense though. Cut off by a Brahmin in Storrow Drive traffic? A blue blood Yankee pisses you off in the beer line at Fenway? Get ye self some good olde dynamite and head south of Boston.

WHITEY'S BOSTON

After 16 years on the run, James "Whitey" Bulger is back in the Bay State and being tried for a lifetime of crime. A look at some of the local places where he made his mark.

By Hilary Sargent, ChartGirl.com

DISCLAIMER: This chart contains information about alleged crimes, some of which have not been proven in court. But that's mostly because SOMEONE disappeared for 16 years. Welcome back, Whitey. You're the worst.

HILARY SARGENT
Twitter: @chartgirl_
© 2013 CHARTGIRL.COM